Door-to-Door Script & Objection Handling

The goal of a first visit is not to close a sale. It's to earn a second conversation: a free check-up, a demo, or a scheduled call. Keep it short, friendly and local.

Before you walk in

- Rules: respect "No Soliciting" signs. Never knock at homes before 10 a.m., after sunset, or on Sundays and major holidays (City of Tyler Sec. 4-61). Confirm with the City whether a solicitor permit applies to business visits, and check rules in each nearby town you visit.
- Best times: Tue–Thu, 9:30–11:30 a.m. or 2–4 p.m. Avoid lunch, opening/closing, weekends and holiday rushes.
- Do your homework (2 minutes): check their Google listing, website and Facebook on your phone. Note one specific, positive thing and one gap.
- Bring: flyers, business cards, blank check-up forms, a tablet with demo stores loaded, a pen and the prospect tracker.
- Look the part: branded polo or clean business-casual, name badge, and a smile. If customers are waiting, come back later.

The 5-step visit (3 to 5 minutes)

1. Open (10 seconds)

Ask for the owner by name if you know it. Read the room.

"Hi, I'm Mike. I'm a local web developer here in Tyler. Is the owner in? ... I'll be quick. I know you're busy."

2. Connect (30 seconds)

Make it about them. Use what you found online.

"I love what you've done with the store. I saw your [Facebook post / reviews] about [specific thing]. How long have you been open?"

3. Ask (60 seconds)

Questions, not a pitch. Listen more than you talk.

"Can customers buy from you online right now?" · "How do out-of-town customers order?" · "Have you ever thought about selling online? What stopped you?"

4. Share (60 seconds)

Tie what they said to what you do. Show a demo on the tablet.

"That's exactly what I help with. I build online stores for local shops. I design it, load your products, set up payments and keep it running, so you don't have to touch the tech. Here's one I built for a boutique..."

5. Next step (30 seconds)

Offer the free check-up or a short follow-up. Get a name and number.

"I do a free 15-minute online store check-up for local businesses. It shows exactly where customers are slipping away. Could I drop it off Thursday, or would a quick call work better?"

If the owner isn't in

"No problem! Could you give the owner this? It has my number and a free check-up offer. What's the best time to catch them?"

- Write the owner's name and best time on your tracker. Come back once. If there's still no luck, call.

HANDLING OBJECTIONS

Common Objections & Responses

Acknowledge first ("That makes sense"), then answer, then ask a question. Never argue. If it's a firm no, thank them and leave a card.

They say...	You say...
"We're not interested."	"Totally fair. Can I ask, is that because you already sell online, or it's just not a priority right now?" (Then leave the flyer: "If that ever changes, I'm local.")
"It's too expensive."	"I hear you. Packages start at $1,500, and most shops make that back from a handful of online orders a month. What would 10 extra orders a month mean for you?"
"I don't have time for this."	"That's exactly why I do it all for you. After one short meeting you just approve things. You won't be building anything."
"My nephew / a friend does our website."	"That's great to have family help. Does it let customers buy online? I can work alongside them, or just handle the store and ads so they don't have to."
"We tried Shopify / Wix and it didn't work."	"A lot of owners tell me that. Those tools hand you a blank template. I build it, stock it and market it for you, and I'm right here in Tyler if anything breaks."
"We're fine with Facebook."	"Facebook is great for getting noticed. A store lets people actually buy at 10 p.m. when you're closed, and you own the customer list instead of the algorithm."
"My customers are all local."	"Local customers shop online too. Online orders with curbside pickup or local delivery are a big part of it, especially around the holidays."
"Send me some information."	"Happy to! Here's a flyer. What's the best email? I'll also send a quick check-up of your online presence so it's specific to you. Can I follow up Friday?"
"We're too small for a website."	"Most of my clients are small, family-owned shops. The Launch package is built for exactly that: simple, affordable, and ready in about two weeks."
"Who are you? How do I know you're legit?"	"Good question. You should ask. I'm Mike Haddon, owner of Skelli-Sites, based here in Tyler. Here's my card and a live demo store I built. I'm happy to meet anytime."

They say...	You say...
"Come back after the holidays."	"Will do. Just so you know, stores take 2 to 4 weeks to build, so starting in January means you're ready for Valentine's Day and spring. Can I pencil in a call for the first week of January?"

Closing a ready buyer

- Recommend one package based on what they told you. Don't read the whole price list.
- Confirm scope in writing: a simple statement of work with package, price, timeline and what you need from them.
- Collect the 50% deposit (card reader or invoice) paid to the business, never to you personally.
- Book the brand workshop before you leave. Momentum matters.

After every visit

- Log it in the prospect tracker before you walk into the next business.
- Send a thank-you text or email within 24 hours: "Thanks for your time today, [Name]. Great to meet you."
- Deliver the check-up within a week. Then follow up at 2–3 weeks and monthly after that.
- Ask every owner: "Do you know another business owner who might want this?"

DAILY TARGET: A good day is 10–15 visits, 3–5 real conversations, and 1–2 check-ups or follow-up calls booked. Track these numbers weekly: they tell you what's working.
